1 The tunic of Sergeant D. Phillips in which you can spot the bullet holes when he was wounded by Russian rifle fire at the Battle of Alma in 1854.

8 The gardens at Castle Campbell are an important adjunct to the Castle and were intended for the exclusive use of the lord, his family and guests. A fissure in the rock in the corner of the terraced garden is known as John Knox's Pulpit as the fiery Protestant preached from here to a large congregation in 1556.

11 The Falkirk pot is a traditional three-legged cooking pot manufactured in cast iron from the 1760s. Pots such as this, along with cannon balls, were among the early products manufactured by Carron Ironworks. Pots to this exact design, are still produced in Africa today and bear the name 'Falkirk Pots'.
